

Justin's Pretend Hike Through Maryland

Category : Maryland / Washington D.C.

Published by Scott on 2006/4/24

Our Pretend Hike Through Maryland Today I woke up face to face with a huge beaver. Of course it ran off right away however it was still an interesting experience. Today we hiked through the Greenways. For those of you that don't know what that is it is miles of open space, and nature. It was so relaxing, just sitting there in the shade of a tree falling asleep listening to the river slowly meander through the valley.

The next day we decided to go into town. We hiked into Bowie at around 11:00 in the morning. The people were extremely nice and welcomed us with open arms. We visited the library and got to read about Bowie. We also got to see the Belair Stable Museum. Belair Stable was owned by William Woodward and was a premier racing stable. We left Bowie with a full stomach thanks to Mrs. Deihl. The next day we were walking next to the Severn River. While we were there we saw several fishermen and crabbers. We thought we would give fishing a try and ended up with nothing. However the fishermen watching got quite a laugh out of it. Later on that day the fishermen had pity and invited us to eat dinner with them. Of course we ate all fish and slept well.

Nothing happened for the next few days, but three days later we came to Sandy Point State Park. We stopped and celebrated its 50th anniversary. While we were there we swam, boated, and windsurfed. We also gave fishing another try, and most of us didn't leave empty handed. In conclusion we had fun on our trip through Maryland. We got to try new things like fishing and windsurfing. We also got to rest in a Greenway. We visited Bowie and got to celebrate at Sandy Point State Park.